Rōmānī alterum Horātium memoriā tenēbant et in summō honōre habēbant.

Post Rōmulum sex rēgēs deinceps in urbe regnābant. Sed Tarquinius, ultimus rēgum, superbus et crūdēlis erat. Nec iūra bona populō dăbat, nec cīvitātem bene gubernābat. Itaque Rōmānī Tarquinium et Sextum, Tarquiniī fīlium, crūdēlem ferōcemque adolescentem, ex urbe expulērunt. "Nōn iam," inquiunt, "Rōmānīs rēgēs erunt. Cīvēs Rōmānī, nōn rēgēs, urbem cīvitātemque regent."

Intereā Tarquinius ad Porsennam, omnis Etrūriae rēgem, contendit, et omnia narrāvit. Porsenna, "O amīce," inquit, "non ferendae sunt iniūriae tuae, non ferendae sunt fīliī tuī iniūriae. Multī equitēs, multī peditēs mihi sunt. Equitēs peditēsque meos omnes convocabo, et cum multīs mīlitibus tē tuumque fīlium ad urbem scelerātam dūcēmus. Iterum in urbe regnābis." Itaque per tōtam Etrūriam, per clīvōs et agrōs nuntiī contendērunt, et ex omnibus vīcīs Etruscōs ad arma convocāvērunt. Splendida erant arma Etruscorum; cristae rubrae in galeis horrebant; scuta lūce coruscā fulgēbant. Porsenna cum mīlitibus Rōmam contendit. Per omnēs vīcōs agricolae vehementer timēbant. Etruscī frūmentum casāsque incendērunt, arborēs excīdērunt, mulierēs līberosque necāvērunt, multam praedam raptavērunt.

The Romans held another Horatius in memory and they had [him] in the highest honour. After Romulus, six kings in turn ruled in the city. But Tarquin, the last king, was proud and cruel. He did not give good laws to the people nor guide the state well. And so the Romans expelled Tarquin and Sextus, Tarquin's son, a cruel and fierce youth, from the city. They said, "There will not be Roman kings now, the Roman citizens, not kings will rule the city and the state."

Meanwhile Tarquin hurried to Porsenna king of all Etruria and told him everything. Porsenna said, "O friend, your injuries are not to be borne and not to be borne are the injuries of your son. I have many horsemen, many footsoldiers. I will call together all my horsemen and footsoldiers and with many soldiers we will lead you and your son to the wicked city. You will rule again in the city." So throughout all Etruria, through hills and fields messengers hurried and called the Etruscans together to arms from all the villages. The arms of the Etruscans were splendid; red crests stood upon [their] helmets; [their] flashing shields shone with light. Porsenna hurried to Rome with the soldiers. Through all the villages the farmers feared greatly. The Etruscans burned the corn and cottages, they cut down trees, they killed women and children and snatched up much plunder.

If you are wondering what Horatius has got to do with all this, don't worry he will appear in the next episode! The picture at the top of the first page shows the Etrurian landscape – modern Tuscany. If you have a synchronological chart you will see "Tarquin expelled 509BC" marked on the stream that shows Rome. You may remember this story from Week 4 Day 3 of the first term of the first year of this course. Look back over it now.
