Exam Style Questions

- (a) Pater Anchises (line 1) who is this and what is his relationship to the narrator? [2]
- (b) What are the speaker's three requests in lines 265-266 (di, prohibete... ...servate pios.) and whom is he addressing? [4]
- (c) Who is Ulixi (line 273) and what is his relationship to Laertia (line 272)? [2]
- (d) Why does the narrator call him saevi? [2]
- (e) Translate lines 274-277, (mox et Leucatae... litore puppes).
- (f) write out and scan line 276 (hunc petimus... ...urbi), marking the long and short syllables and divisions between the feet. [2]

Specimen answers are on the next page.

- (a) Pater Anchises (line 1) who is this and what is his relationship to the narrator? [2] Pater Anchises, "Father Anchises" was a member of the Trojan royal family. [1] He is the father of the narrator, Aeneas. [1]
- (b) What are the speaker's three requests in lines 265-266 (di, prohibete... ...servate pios.) and whom is he addressing? [4] The speaker, Anchises asks the great gods [1] to prohibit the threats that they have just hear Celaeno, the chief Harpy utter, [1]to avert such misfortunes [1]and to save the pios "religious" Trojans. [1]
- (c) Who is Ulixi (line 273) and what is his relationship to Laertia (line 272)? [2] Ulysses is the Greek hero whose journey home from the Trojan wars is described in Homer's Odyssey [1]. Laertes is his father. [1]
- (d) Why does the narrator call him saevi? [2]

Aeneas, the narrator calls Ulysses "cruel" because Aeneas and his companions have fled from Troy. Troy was attacked and finally destroyed by the Greeks. Ulysses (Greek name Odysseus) was the Greek who thought of the cruel subterfuge of the wooden horse which enabled the Greeks to get into Troy and so end the siege and destroy the city. [2] The was typical of Ulysses who is often described in Homer's Iliad as  $\mu \tilde{\eta} \tau \iota \zeta$  "wily/tricky/cunning". The Greeks admired Ulysses for his cunning but the Romans, considering themselves to be heirs of the Trojans, usually called him cruel. His tricky nature did not accord at all with the old Roman notions of honourable or pios (see line 266) behaviour. Aeneas accordingly here calls him not cunning but "cruel Ulysses" in contrast to the pios Trojans. [2] (Either of these points well made would probably get full marks.) Note:- I at any rate find the contrast here between the pios Trojans and "savage/cruel" Ulysses interesting. Both Aeneas and Ulysses journeyed from Troy. Ulysses to go home: Aeneas to make a new home. I sense a good possible exam question here comparing the two heroes. Perhaps you could make one up!

(e) Translate lines 274-277, (mox et Leucatae... litore puppes). [5] Check your answer with your flashcards.

(f) write out and scan line 276 (hunc petimus... ...urbi), marking the long and short syllables and divisions between the feet.

Elisions and last two feet.

hunc petimus fess(i) et parvae suc | cēdĭmŭs | ūrbi;

Diphthongs are long.

hunc petimus fess(i) et parvāe suc cēdĭmŭs ūrbi;

Vowels before tow consonants of x are long.

hūnc petimūs fēss(i) ēt pārvāe sūc cēdĭmŭs ūrbi;

Count remaining syllables: 9 therefore three spondees and one dactyl.

hūnc pětĭ mūs fēss(i) ēt pār vāe sūc cēdĭmŭs ūrbi;

(a) Translate lines 1 - 4 Stabant orantes... arcet harena.

Correct your answer using your flashcards or those on the quizlet website.

(b) what does Aeneas see to cause this reaction?

He sees a turbulent crowd holding out their hands to the ferryman and begging to be taken across the river. The ferryman, Charon, is choosing some to take over and pushing away others.

What is the explanation for what he sees?

The ferryman is accepting only souls whose bodies have been buried and rejecting those who are unburied.

(c) O virgo... (line 5): who is being addressed and what is her rôle in this extract?

The Sibyl of Cumae, Deiphobe is being addressed and her rôle is that of guide to Aeneas in his visit to the underworld.

(d) What do we learn about the nature of the underworld from these lines?

The part of the underworld where Aeneas is standing in this extract is not pleasant. Virgil describes the banks of the river as horrible (ripas horrendas) and the water itself is livida a colour that could be grey, white or black and blue and associated with bruising. The gloomy character of Charon the ferryman adds to the unpleasant atmosphere. No one wants to remain here and all the souls around him are clamouring to depart. However, the whole of the underworld is evidently not so unpleasant. The souls are longing with love amore for the opposite bank and the pools that are longed for exoptata something better is waiting across the river. Virgil hints at reincarnation in the word revisunt.

(e) write out and scan line 4 [2] working: ast alios longe summotos arcet harena

ast alios longe summotos | ārcět hă | rēna last five syllables

ast alios longe summotos | ārcět hă | rēna nine remaining syllables so three spondees and a dactyl

āst al i ōs lōn ge sūm motos | ārcět hǎ | rēna No diphthongs as io is not a diphthong: alios is a three syllable word: a-li-os Vowels before two consonants long.

Therefore:

No elisions

āst ăl ĭ | ōs lōn ge sūm | motos | ārcět hă | rēna Therefore the two ajacent longs fomr one foot and sothe next syllable must also be long: āst ăl ĭ | ōs lōn | gē sūm | motos | ārcět hă | rēna

Only two syllables in foot 4 so both must be long.  $\bar{a}st \ \check{a}l \ \check{l} \ \bar{o}s \ l\bar{o}n | \ g\bar{e} \ s\bar{u}m | \ m\bar{o}t\bar{o}s \ | \ \bar{a}rc\check{e}t \ h\check{a} \ | \ r\bar{e}na$

(f) Comment on Virgil's use of language and metre in this line.

Virgil uses alliteration in this line. All the words alliterate except longe summotos. These two words stand out from the alliterating words by consisting of long syllables. The long syllables emphasise distance; Charon is pushing souls away from the boat.
